New Years' Address from AAF President

Euisun Chung
(President of AAF)

A bright year in 2013 has begun!

I would like to start by wishing our entire archery family a New Year filled with hope, happiness and good fortune, while also expressing my appreciation for the love and passion for archery that you have shown over the last year.

The 2012 London Olympics last year was a great opportunity to showcase our latent talents that have advanced their skills through several development programs. It also provided a prominent stage on which archery was able to gain significant recognition as one of the major Olympic sports. In particular, I have no doubt that Asian archery gave many sports fans from all over the world many memorable impressions. It was a great pleasure to watch our archers' stellar performance in London and to see Asian archery at the forefront of our sport.

Despite these successes, we cannot afford to become complacent, and must take one further step forward by overcoming other remaining challenges. In this regard, Asian archery will continue to focus on raising our competitiveness for both athletes and officials through continuous development programs such as equipment support, technical assistance, joint training and seminars for coaches, judges and organizations.

This year will present more great opportunities to demonstrate the competence of Asian archery, including the World Archery Championships and Asian Archery Championships. I believe that Asian archers already have started training and preparing for these major events. And I look forward to discovering many talented young archers who will carry our sport to new horizons in the months and years to come.

Once again, I would like to express my deep gratitude for your participation in the development of Asian Archery and hope that the New Year brings you both victories and happiness.

Best regards,

Euisun Chung
President
Asian Archery Federation
